

Protest is the edge of change.

Young people at risk through their acting out, anger and indifference are engaged in a protest they often do not fully understand. Child and youth care professionals strive to contain their outrage and help them find their voice to realize an acceptable and hopefully meaningful place in society. Protest has its roots in sensitivity denied and the perception of harm or injustice underway. Patience and active listening are essential to its resolution.

